Johnny Appleseed

Long ago, a man named John Chapman traveled across the United States. Most people remember him by his nickname, Johnny Appleseed. He carried a bag of apple seeds and planted them wherever he went.

Johnny wanted people to have apple trees for food and shade. He gave seeds to families moving west so they could grow their own orchards. He often wore simple clothes and was known for his kindness.

Today, Johnny Appleseed is remembered as a folk hero. His story teaches us about helping others, caring for the land, and sharing what we have.
